Fragrance is only an example of all the chemical products facing increased scrutiny. Attendees can broadly apply this course material to identify solutions to a wide range of situations.

COURSE DESCRIPTION

Recent pressure on the fragrance industry to create greener products illustrates many of the issues and solutions that apply to all chemical products. The fragrance industry has been historically self-regulating, but many outside forces are now at work, including CARB, the EU, DfE, NGOs, consumer groups and large retailers. The Green movement has demanded more information on environmental fate and respiratory issues. The EPA has provided computer models (EPI Suite, pbt profiler) that allow informed assumptions on chemical properties when experimental data does not exist. With no official definition of a Green Fragrance, there are many ways to customize fragrance for enhanced human safety and environmental sensitivity. This 90-minute accredited training will address these concerns.

Module 1:

- The history of the environmental movement
- Fragrance testing before the Green movement
- CARB

Module 2:

Module 3:
